Facts About Polio

month regions during periods of rising or high prevalence.

6. What is the most fatal type of poliomyelitis?
"The bulbar type. In this type the virus attacks the bulb at the base of the brain. The respiratory center lies in this portion of the brain and death may be caused by paralysis at this point."

7. What are the chances that a particular poliomyelitis victim will suffer permanent crippling or other physical impairment?
"Those chances are much less than many people think. An optimistic picture is painted by the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis. Suppose we consider it: The expectancy at the time of the onset is that about 50 per cent will ultimately emerge free of permanent effects, that about 25 per cent will have severe permanent effects, and that about five per cent to 10 per cent will die. It is estimated that of the individuals who have a residual paralysis, roughly 75 per cent may have permanent effects of such a degree that it will be necessary to supply braces and-or surgery in the rehabilitation of the individual."

8. What is the "polio season?"
"The polio season normally extends from about the last of June until the middle of September. So, as far as 1950 is concerned, it is right in the middle of it. Your State Health Department urges all parents to continue to be careful."

Here are a few reminders:
1. Avoid unnecessary crowds.
2. Continue normal activities, but avoid exhausting exercise.
3. Emphasize cleanliness.
4. When ill, put the patient to bed and call the doctor.
5. Remember that the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis will assist the family in procuring prompt hospitalization.

Father Darkleaf's Column
by chr

An English lad, Matthew Webb, distinguished himself several times by saving swimming companions from drowning. A seaman's career seemed only natural. However, in 1875, Webb left the sea and turned professional swimmer. On July 3 of that year, he swam from Blackwall Pier to Gravesend —a distance of 20 miles in 4 3-4 hours —a record which remained unbeaten until 1899. Then he turned his eyes toward France. And so it happened 75 years ago this summer that Capt. Matthew Webb, after one unsuccessful attempt, became the first to perform the stillcoveted stunt of swimming the English Channel. Contemporary papers acclaimed his August 24 performance "the most wonderful swimming feat ever known."

The race was on! But 36 years elapsed before another English swimmer—T. W. Burgess—made a 2nd successful crossing. The 24 year old record of Gertrude Ederle, first woman and third American winner, was broken just this past week by a San Diego stenographer, Florence Chadwick.

The feat grew in popularity until each summer finds the English and French shores lined with an increasing number of water-lovers of all ages and nationalities, each carefully testing temperature and tide for a favorable time.

Perhaps the mostly widely publicized of any contender has been Shirley Mae France, 17-year old Massachusetts school girl, who failed last summer (and this) by six miles to reach her goal —after 57 days' rigorous training. Ironically, a few days previous, a crippled Belgian industrialist, Fernand Dumoulin, attending a beach party, took a sudden notion to go for a swim. With no training, and fortified by no more than a taste of champagne, he entered the water at Cap Gris Nez and headed for Dover, 19 miles away. He emerged 23 hours and one minute later—the 29th person to swim the English Channel. —Quote.

The latest tip is that if an "A" bomb hits—you should fall flat and double up. Don't make for cover if it takes more than a step or two to get there. Whether you live or die may depend on how fast you move in the very first second. The government says so in a new book on "the effects of atomic weapons." For the first time they give you some definite pointers on what to do in case of an atom bomb attack. The main idea is to get something between you and the explosion. Exposed skin is dangerous. You need not worry about talk that atomic explosions might contaminate the entire earth with radiation. It would require something like 1,000,000 atom bombs to do that, and we do not plan to be around after that many go off anyway. Radiological warfare is a possibility, and someone should try to figure out what to do about that. However it could hardly be used to kill people unless it just scares them to death. If you house ever got contaminated, just clean it up. Plain soap and water is as good as anything. You might have to take the furniture and your clothes out and bury them. There is no use taking a "shot" or serum. Burns are a great danger. If we are lucky, the authorities will be able to flash a warning of approaching bombers, and we can dive for shelter. The basement of your house should be a safe spot. Most of the heat and radiation is given off in the first three seconds after the explosion. If you are inside a building, drop to the floor and crawl under a bed or desk. The worst damage is within a mile of the point of explosion. Beyond half a mile, you should be safe if behind about two feet of good concrete.
